

ANDERSON

We were kept very busy because of the Perth families who were in a hurry to have portraits made of their loved ones before they were sent overseas. This is all very natural in a war-time situation. Also we had dozens of Yankee sailors who were on shore leave from submarine duties. This was very sad because a lot of them never came back to Perth again to collect their photos, even though they were quite sure that more shore leave would see them back. I don't know where they got the information from but it never happened. I think it was the Battle of Coral Sea and these photos just stayed in the pigeon-holes as far as I can see, forever.
